About Bridget Macklin

Geology is at the core of my ceramics: Working with porcelain I make hand build vessels using slabs and flattened coils, mixing found materials into the clay and scraping back to reveal fantastic and colourful strata. I delight in the repeated refining of my pieces, revelling in the challenge of taking risks with the materials, constantly striving to make the most lustrous pieces which only reveal their full nature on close inspection. The interior of each piece tells a little more of the story. Sometimes I incorporate Drawings, maps and hand written notes which hint at a place or time of significance.
